Amy Chua and Jed Rubenfeld state that success is fueled by three factors that are a result of culture. Superiority complex is a belief that the individuals or groups are exceptional. The second factor is insecurity, which is when someone feel the need to prove oneself or that they are not good enough. The third factor is a characteristic that Chua and Rubenfeld say is learned: grit. People naturally want instant gratification, but people with grit are willing to give up it for future success. While many psychologists are agree with these three factors, Chua and Rubenfeld has been criticized for leaving factors such as generational wealth out. Finally, according to Chua and Rubenfeld, the way be successful is develop these qualities through self-discipline and determination.

Write two-paragraphs about your goals and the steps to achieving them. You will be writing about only two goals, one in each paragraph. Goals may include these or other ideas: find a job, improve grades, meet new people, get into shape, learn a new skill, save money. Most of the sentences in each paragraph should be about the steps involved in achieving the goal.

Include each of the grammar forms listed below at least one time. Underline each grammar item and label it with the correct letter each time you use it.

a. simple present
b. simple past
c. present perfect
d. gerund
e. infinitive
f. phrasal verb

This unit includes topics of psychology and learning. Research a topic on self-care and share strategies with your classmates. Create a 3- to 5-minute presentation about the topic. Explain what the self-care strategy is and why it is important. Because your presentation will be only 3-5 minutes, focus on one or two strategies under the topic you choose. For example, if you choose physical self-care, you might describe sleep and rest. If you choose emotional, you might talk about stress management. Try to incorporate this unit's grammar in your presentation.

Topics:

Physical	Emotional	Spiritual	Personal
Work	Financial	Social	Intellectual
